Big companies await skilled tech-savvy grads

Forget white collar vs. blue collar jobs. The future is in the “new collar” or skilled technical market and the forecast is great.

With a drastic shortage of tech workers, companies are now focusing on skills-based hiring rather than credentials to fill these roles. Tech companies such as Intel and GitHub have also been seeking talent from other educational avenues, such as coding programs and high school partnerships, according to Fast Money.

In a USA Today column, the company's CEO, Ginni Rometty explains that not all tech jobs require a college degree. These “new collar jobs,” says Rometty, are becoming harder to fill. In the U.S. alone, there are more than 500,000 open jobs in tech-related sectors, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. A recent study by Code.org reports that as many as 1 million programming jobs will be unfilled by 2020.
